Latch Issues

All babies are different. Some babies breastfeed well from the start; other babies may have a harder time and need some help. If your baby does not latch on right away, this does not mean that your baby does not want to breastfeed.

Common causes:
- Feeding position.
- Use of artificial nipples.
- Mom’s nipples are flat or inverted.
- Baby may have lip/tongue tie.
- Baby has thrush.
- Engorgement.
- Prematurity.

What Can I Do to Help?

Don't give up! Remove milk from breasts as often as possible.
- Hold baby skin to skin.
- Watch for baby’s early hunger cues; it is hard to latch a crying baby.
- Check to make sure positioning is correct.
- Express milk to nipple and then try latching baby.
- Wait until baby’s mouth is open wide before attempting to latch.
- Be patient – you are learning together.

Ideas to Try:
- Work on latch when baby is calm and mom is relaxed.
- If possible, avoid artificial nipples. If other feeding methods are offered, use paced feeding.
- Use different positioning.
- Limit the use of strong perfume, deodorant, or lotions.
- Contact local WIC peer helper or lactation consultant.
